

Mini-Conference on the Japanese-American Experience During World War 2 & Today

Berkeleyans Arlene Makita-Acuña and Dr. Troy Kaji, both children of World War II internees, will discuss their parents' experiences in the Camps, and what it means to be Japanese-American in California today. Arlene will also discuss her participation in the archeological digs at Camp Amache.

April 25, 1942 — San Francisco, California. Residents of Japanese ancestry appear for registration prior to evacuation and relocation in internment camps. These two photos by Dorothea Lange, were among the many censored by the U.S. military until 1966.

"The meanest dust storms... and not a blade of grass. And the springs are so cruel; the people couldn't keep the tarpaper on the shacks."
— Dorothea Lange, at Manzanar
